

Animals Box Set

Colin M. Drysdale

Draw Your Own Encyclopaedia Animals is a box set of the first six books in a new series from Pictish Beast Publications aimed at children between seven and eleven years old. Each individual book in this series forms a subject-specific chapter of the overall encyclopaedia. They are designed to encourage children to think about the world around them, and to learn how to search for information on the internet and from books, while having a little bit of fun.

Draw Your Own Encyclopaedia Animals provides an interesting, but educational, introduction to a variety of different areas of animal life, along with quick facts, questions you can answer and, at the end, pop quizzes to test the knowledge of animals gained by reading these books.

So far, these may seem like any other factual books, but unlike almost every other such book, children are allowed to draw in this one. In fact, they are actively encouraged to do so! Through this, they become the illustrator of their very own encyclopaedia chapters all about animals.

By engaging children in a variety of fun activities, such as drawing, answering questions and reading quick facts, this encourages them to take in and retain information without necessarily realising that they are engaged in learning.

As well as being an educational activity book for children, these books are also a STEM resource for educators looking to provide biology based fun classroom activities for their students. To aid with this, these books are supported by an optional educator's licence that allows educators to legally photocopy its contents to create classroom hand-outs and suggestions for additional fun classroom activities to accompany them (available through the publisher's website). In addition, the interactive nature of these books, and the need to search for suitable images online on which to base the required drawings for the book, provides the perfect starting point for discussing online safety, and how to judge the trustworthiness of information that can be found online.

About The Author: Dr Colin M. Drysdale is a zoologist, STEM ambassador, educationalist and author. This book, and indeed the whole Draw Your Own Encyclopaedia series, allows him to combine these interests into a single project.
